AUGUSTA, Maine (NEWS CENTER) — The Adoptive and Foster Families of Maine, Inc. held its 19th annual spring conference in Augusta to train foster parents how to best parent children who have gone through the trauma of being separated from their families.

The conference drew hundreds of families from across Maine, and employees from the Department of Health and Human Services.

The conference also hosted Eshete Williams, a doctor of psychology in Organizational Management and Consulting. Williams is also a Licensed Marriage and Family Therapist. She is from Los Angeles, California, and gives talks all over the country.

"It's like putting together a puzzle and it's a mystery all at the same time because you're trying to --- the best you possibly can -- guess on what to do and how to care for kids and we know that if you come from a place of love and support, then you meet some of the needs," said Dr. Williams.

Disruption Prevention and Intervention: Essential Strategies

Disruptions are antithetical to the stability that foster and adoptive families must provide. This workshop overviews a model of practice that provides strategies essential for disruption prevention and intervention, emphasizing the strengths, skills, and supports that families need and agencies must provide. Examples and practice tools will be shared.

The Impact of Fostering and Adopting on Birth Children

Presented by Eshel Williams

This workshop addresses the impact of fostering and adopting on birth children of foster and adoptive parents. It provides insight into the challenges that birth children experience as other children come and go, and as their family dynamics change. A major focus is how to assess and ensure supports for birth children as their families engage in fostering and adopting.
